I was in between majors and I wasn’t sure what I was passionate about. The co-op program allowed me to explore my options and helped me solidify my choice. My biggest takeaway from my co-op terms was realizing what areas of focus were not a fit with my interests and skills. This helped me figure out what I was passionate about and allowed me to better tailor my remaining courses. My advice for incoming co-op students would be to have an open mind; go in with a positive outlook and be open to being challenged.

“If the Canadian Embassy in Berlin undergoes a rigorous interview and assessment process and has high expectations for all of our Co-op students in terms of analytical skills, flexibility and productivity. Ms. Wiggers met these during a time of crisis and uncertainty, and stepped up her game in communicating both vertically and horizontally. Ms Wiggers, through her resilience and initiative, made a memorable contribution to her workplace. She was an indispensable contributor to Canada’s knowledge of global best practices and lessons learned in COVID-19 pandemic management.”

“ATB’s Goodness Grows ran two interactive social media activations to celebrate both Father’s Day and Calgary Folk Fest. In each activation, Jade took on challenging roles with a steep learning curve and performed admirably. All of these activations also required Jade to learn the ins-and-outs of complex, evolving processes, while writing copy for social media in real-time. Her dedication to learning ATB’s brand voice and adapting to changing circumstances was exceptional. This also meant that ATB’s External Communications team, in charge of connecting and communicating with the public primarily through ATB’s social media channels, could take more of a step back. Our External Communications team had been at the forefront of ATB’s consumer and public outreach since day one of the COVID-19 lockdown. The team had been working long hours, with very few breaks, that often bled from weekdays into weekends. Having a trusted resource like Jade to step in and step up to help relieve the pressure was an essential support for the team yet an uncommon role for a student intern — most aren’t trusted with that level of responsibility.”
